“ A legacy is the sum total of ones life that impacted others, that made a difference and Shirley’s legacy has touched so many lives but none more than her family. Each generation reflects the values that were so important to Shirley. Her legacy will live on through those whose lives were touched by her. I was blessed to have Shirley as a neighbor and felt so close to her and her family. So caring so warm. I appreciated the fact that Shirley and I were so on the same page politically which had a foundation in her core values. Was glad we were on the same page as I really would not have wanted her against me. To know Shirley was to know her family and she was so proud of her family and rightly so. The first time I was in her home she proudly “introduced” me to her beautiful family whose pictures were by the door and on the walls. I will miss her many notes and funny attachments the last of which was Sunday before she went home to be with the Lord. To each person that knew Shirley and loved her the pain of the loss is so real, so intense, and so overwhelming but may comfort be found in knowing that pain will diminish and will be replaced by the warmth of the many memories she has left that are ours forever. Thank you Shirley for your legacy!

“ I remember Shirley's warm and loving hospitality! We met in Hawaii with big hugs and smiles. And then Scott and I drove to Wayne Sr. and Shirley's home in CA when we got out of the Marine Corp. It was full of family and commotion and we were ushered in to join the fun.

Once again we visited their home on the "Mountain," sitting in the living room visiting while she was "oohing and ahing" over our kids like they were her own grand-kids. So much so, she graciously watched our little one while the adults took the "big" kids (Heidi and Linda 3 1/2 at the time) to Disneyland! Never a dull moment, as another grandchild decided to join the family that day. I think she had two or three extra arms that no one saw... lol.

I loved connecting on Facebook with her over the years. And seeing the family posts as the years went by.

She loved us for loving her family, and we loved her like family! We are so glad to have been part of her life!
